A Samsung estreou a One UI 4.1 com a série Galaxy S22 e anunciou as novidades que a nova versão da interface traz consigo. A atualização começou a ser distribuída para outros celulares Galaxy apenas algumas semanas depois. Entretanto, nem todas as características do software - como já era esperado - chegaram a todos os dispositivos contemplados pela update. Algumas funções da One UI 4.1 são destinadas a modelos premium, muito embora a nova interface funcione em aparelhos intermediários como os Galaxy M31 e M32. No entanto, um de seus principais recursos - os Smart Widgets (Widgets Inteligentes) - não foi disponibilizado para os modelos Galaxy Z Flip 3, Z Fold 3 e A52 5G.Os Smart Widgets foram incluídos na atualização da One UI 4.1 lançada para os smartphones Galaxy S21, S21 Plus, S21 Ultra e S21 FE. Ainda não está claro o motivo pelo qual a Samsung não lançou a função para seus atuais celulares dobráveis e um de seus modelos mais populares da linha Galaxy A. A indisposição do recurso surpreende porque ele não parece requer um hardware extremamente potente para funcionar. Mesmo que a função demande alto nível de processamento, os aparelhos da série Galaxy Z, que têm chips poderosos e estavam na lista de aparelhos que receberão as características da linha Galaxy S22, deveriam recebê-la. Ainda não está definido se a Samsung lançará ou não o recurso Smart Widgets para celulares dobráveis e de médio alcance. Até o momento não há qualquer pronunciamento oficial por parte da marca sul-coreana.Veja também Widgets have been around for a long time. It used to be one of the features that made Android better than iOS. These days, our reliance on widgets has waned. Between better-designed apps, quick settings, app shortcuts, more powerful notifications, and always-on displays, there aren't too many reasons to have them. However, there are just some things, like note-taking, weather, calendar, to-do lists, etc that will always simply work better in a widget format. We simply don't live in the era we once did, but that doesn't mean widgets are useless now. Here are the best Android widgets!The best Android widgets for your home screen 1Weather is arguably one of the best weather apps available. Its Android widgets aren't half bad either. It invokes the old style "flip clock and weather" style that used to adorn HTC Sense devices and it's configurable. Clicking on the clock portion takes you to your alarm app. Clicking on the weather portion takes you to 1Weather's main interface. There are also weather-only widgets that deliver a good amount of information. It's free to use. All the paid version does is remove ads. AccuWeather is another good weather app with a decent widget if you 1Weather isn't doing it for you. Battery Widget Reborn among the best Android widgets for battery meters. It provides a single, circular battery gauge widget. You can change the color and size to match your theme and home screen layout. The app itself also comes with battery information, shortcuts to things like WiFi and Bluetooth settings, and it even gives you charts to show more detailed battery activity. It's nothing overly complicated. However, in an era where smartphone makers still don't always let you enable the percentage in the status bar, apps like Battery Widget Reborn are still useful. Calendar Widget by Home Agenda is an excellent calendar widget for your mobile phone. You can theme the widgets to your liking. There is an option to download and install themes by other people as well. Some other options include a weather function, hiding various events, hiding declined events, and even changing the colors of certain calendar labels. It works best with Google Calendar. Recent updates also added way better performance improvements. The app runs for $1.99 but has no additional ads or in-app purchases. Price: Free / Up to $3.49Calendar Widget: Month and Agenda are two Android widgets from Camdri Apps. The first one is a fairly standard and minimal calendar widget. It includes over 90 themes, a minimal layout, support for Google Calendar, and it shows your various upcoming engagements. It looks and feels pretty good, although power users may need something a little more powerful. Calendar Widget: Agenda is much like the other Calendar Widget app, but with more options. You can create widgets specifically for your agenda as well as any other upcoming events you might have. Both widgets are free to use with a limited number of themes. You can buy more as in-app purchases. Chronus Information Widgets is a fairly decent set of widgets for your home screen. It includes predominately clock and weather widgets with some news widgets and some other stuff as well. Most of the widgets are fairly customizable and can work with most home screens. There is also Wear OS support if you need that. The pro version adds some little extras like Google Fit support and support for Reddit in the news widgets. It's a serviceable option that should work well for most people. Joe Hindy / Android AuthorityGoogle Keep is a simple and effective note taking application. With it, you can make text notes, list notes, and even voice notes. It also gives you the option to share notes with others for collaboration. There are a bunch of extra little hidden features throughout the app as well. It also comes with a simple set of Android widgets that gives you the ability to create notes quickly. They range in size from simple to more complex depending on your needs. That's essentially all you need when it comes widgets for note taking apps. It's completely free to use. You can also access notes on Google Drive using any web browser. IFTTT is one of the most powerful apps out there. You use it to create automated tasks that your phone completes on its own. One of its many features is a button widget that activates a command when pressed. For instance, you can use it to turn your Hue lights on or off, automatically text someone that you're on your way home, or pretty much whatever you want. There's a bit of a learning curve, but it's a fun way to automate a lot of tedious tasks. The widget itself is rather simple. However, it's easily one of the most versatile Android widgets out there. KWGT is one of a few make-your-own Android widgets. It employs a WYSIWYG editor. That makes it a bit easier than one would think. You can have it do a variety of things and make it look almost however you want. It also includes support for Zooper, Tasker, and other apps. Some of the things you can have it display include system info (CPU speed, network stats, etc), time, battery, date, countdowns, traffic info, next alarm, location, and more. It's fairly powerful, but it's more work than you'd get with most widgets. It is, to our knowledge, one of the very few custom widget apps still in active development. Zooper is another option, but it doesn't get updates anymore. Buzz Widget is no longer available as of February 2019. That basically leaves KWGT and UCCW as the top dogs. This app is also free via Google Play Pass if you use it. Ovedrop is one of the newer Android widgets on the list. It's technically just a weather app, but it has some surprisingly decent widgets for the home screen. That includes a forecast widget with up to five days, a card style layout that includes the date and battery percentage, and your basic current forecast weather widget. It utilizes Dark Sky as its weather provider and has some basic weather app features as well. The app itself has a dark mode that we quite like and the UI is lovely. There isn't a lot wrong with this one to be honest, and it's a great option if you want some good-looking weather widgets. Tasker is one of the most powerful apps ever made. It's also one of the most complex and complicated. You can use this to make your phone do pretty much whatever you want. The downside is that it's going to take you a while to get there. It includes over 200 actions on its own with tons of plugins that add additional functionality. A lot of other apps also have Tasker support to add to the number of things it can do. Once you make whatever it is you're going to make, it doesn't take long from there to turn it into a widget. That makes this one of the most powerful Android widgets you can get. This one is also free with Google Play Pass if you use the service. Price: Free / $27.99 per yearTickTick is one of the best to-do list apps on mobile. It has a simple UI, plenty of organization and customization options, and most of its features are completely free. It employs a list style with simple controls. You can use it for remembering your work tasks or your grocery list. You can even share lists with friends or family for collaboration. It also includes reminders (up to two per task) for free, unlike many to-do list apps. TickTick is flexible like that. The app also comes with a bunch of widget options. That includes a minimal, but functional calendar widget and widgets specifically for your to-do lists. You can also sort tasks for things like date due. The $27.99 per year version subscription isn't necessary unless you really need more than two reminders per event. Price: Free / Up to $2.99 Time Until is a fun little app with some decent little widgets. It's a countdown timer app. You use it for things like holidays, birthdays, special events, or whatever you would need a countdown for. You can set it down to the second, minute, hour, day, week, or month. It even takes working days into account. The widgets are minimal, but effective. You can choose the background from your own images if you want to or just use a solid color. They also come in different sizes for your convenience. It's not the most popular use of a widget, but Time Until is easily one of the best countdown timer widgets we've seen. Price: Free / $28.99 per yearTodoist has some of the most gorgeous widgets of any to-do list app. The whole app looks really good, actually. The developers do a great job incorporating bright colors, full Material Design, and it's still relatively easy to use. The free version comes with most of the basic features, including tasks, due dates, and some organizational features. Going premium adds things like reminders and other power user features. In terms of looks and Android widgets, this one is as good as it gets in the genre. Widgets are like the app. By that, we mean they're colorful, easy to use, and powerful. We also quite appreciate the cross-platform capabilities of Todoist. It and TickTick are easily the top two best to-do list apps and as it turns out, they both have really good widgets. UCCW is the second excellent make-your-own-widget app on this list, along with KWGT. It was an abandoned project for a while, but started getting updates again. It's not better than ever. The app is a WYSIWYG (what you see is what you get) editor. You create your widget, add in functions, and then add it to the home screen. You can also download and import other people's widget designs. There is even an option to export your designs as an APK file and upload it to Google Play if you want to. It takes a bit of work to get everything just right, but it's an excellent choice once you get everything the way you want. YOWindow Weather is one of the best weather apps hands down. However, it also comes with some decent widgets. Your options include a 14-day forecast, a clock and weather widget, a weekly weather forecast, and a widget specifically for today's weather. It's not as customizable as some, but the weather app is top notch and the widgets definitely work most of the time. The weather information is solid, but you really use this app to look at it because it looks really good. If we missed any of the best Android widgets, tell us about them in the comments.
